

Effectively mulching your Commercial garden with Sugrim

Is your property laden with piles of smelly and smoldering mulch every spring? How much mulch do you need? What type of mulch is best for your landscape and for your garden? When and how much of mulch should you apply? If you want these questions answered, then you will need the services of the Sugrim Maintenance Company, leaders in efficient and thorough mulching of gardens and landscapes.

Not only does mulch add to the aesthetics of landscaping, but it also helps control whatever weeds that grow, and it conserves water. When organic mulch is used for this purpose, it enriches the soil as well.

Sugrim takes into careful consideration all the factors involved in the mulching process of your commercial garden before offering its services. When mulching we make sure that the ground is nice and dry. If you mulch too soon, right after winter, then your perennials end up breaking their dormancy too early. This could stunt the growth of your plantations, leave it flower less, and maybe even die prematurely. Take the help of Sugrim mulching and avoid all these mishaps. We always wait until your plants are all perky and green, and then proceed with the mulching!

In order to protect your plants from cold and harsh winters, we mulch in the late fall when the soil is cold and the roots of the plants have begun their dormancy period.

A potential side effect of too much mulching is that, the moist underbelly of the mulch often attracts worms, and other pest bugs. To minimize the populous of the bugs, we apply thin layer yet just as effective amount of mulch. Furthermore, we also always keep the mulch several inches apart from the roots.

One of many positive attributes of mulching is that it acts as protective shield to the plants and roots over irrigation. When there is an inch of protection between the falling water and the soil, the delicate plants and seeds are less likely going to get washed away during flooding or heavy rainfall. Keeping the plants from being over hydrated evidently helps keep the plants cleaner and free of soil-dwelling diseases.

So call Sugrim maintenance Co today, and leave the mulching of your commercial property in the hands of passionate professionals who will work efficiently and diligently to treat and eradicate all your garden problems.
